History of Neiltown Church

Early pioneers settled the area surrounding Neiltown, PA during the 1790s. As the area's population grew, itinerant circuit riders, including Catholic, Methodist and Presbyterian ministers, visited the communities, holding religious services. In 1822, local Scotch-Irish Presbyterians organized the Concord Presbyterian Church, and in 1826, constructed a log church at Tyrell Farm (today east of Pleasantville, PA along Route 36).

The Concord Presbyterian Church adhered to the doctrine of Original Sin and held extremely plain worship services devoid of frivolous diversions like music and heat. Forbidden to work on Sunday, followers attended services the entire day. When, in 1837, the Presbyterian Church split into the Old and New Schools, the thriving congregation at Tyrell Farm remained staunchly committed to the Old School. This decision along with other factors like Pleasantville and Neiltown (the latter Neiltown) led to a steady decline in membership until the church at Tyrell Farm was finally abandoned.

During the early-1840s, the William Neil family (original settlers of the area) donated land for a new Concord Presbyterian Church in Neilsburg. Built during the summer of 1842, today's Neiltown Church hosted its first sermon on September 14, 1842. Though strict in doctrine, the church flourished until the 1860s and 1870s when the region's oil boom drew people to the thriving towns of Pleasantville and Tidoute. Never a large congregation, the church's membership dropped during the early 1880s, numbering fewer than 30 people.

Increased oil activity in the Neiltown area breathed new life into the Presbyterian church during the final years of the nineteenth century. In 1892, membership reached a record high 64 people, and the Neiltown Cemetery Association was created in 1897. Neiltown Church's style of worship changed dramatically during this period with the installation of a harmonium (pump organ) and two wood-burning stoves. The church and cemetery continued to thrive through the first two decades of the twentieth century. However, during the 1920s Neiltown Church entered another period of decline, hosting only occasional services.

From 1929 to 1945, Neiltown Church saw regular use as the home of the American Sunday School Union. The Cemetery Association also held annual picnics during this period. In preparation for the church's 1942 Centennial Celebration, the congregation replaced the roof, redecorated the interior, and constructed a shed to house an electric generating plant. On September 20, 1942, 290 people attended the two worship services marking the occasion. Yet, despite the excitement created by the church's Centennial anniversary, Sunday School activities and regular worship services ceased in 1945, and Neiltown Church fell into disuse.

By 1969, Neiltown Church's deteriorated condition prompted the creation of a Restoration Committee. As its first order of business, this group replaced the church's floor framing and decking. Beginning in 1973, the church hosted a Spring Memorial Service and an Autumn Praise and Communion Service annually. The Neiltown Cemetery Association acquired the church building from the Lake Erie Presbytery on June 4, 1983, and in September, 1992, Neiltown Church marked its 150th Anniversary. The annual services at Neiltown Church were discontinued in 2003, and the Oil Region Alliance purchased the building for historic preservation in 2004.

Preserving Neiltown Church

The Neiltown Church, built in 1842, is a single-story wooden post & beam structure located in Forest County, Pennsylvania.

This Greek Revival style church contains two rooms, a narthex (39'5" wide by 8'10" deep) & a sanctuary (39'5" wide by 36'1" deep). It can seat approximately 110 people. In 2004, the Oil Heritage Region, Inc. (predecessor to the Oil Region Alliance) purchased the 1,680 square foot building for $1. The Neiltown Cemetery Association retains ownership of the parcel of land upon which the building sits.

The Oil Region Alliance undertook the church's exterior rehabilitation in 2010. To start, a local contractor replaced the building's asphalt/shingled roof with a new, more historically accurate cedar-shingled roof and added a gutter system. A new ADA entrance was added at the rear of the building, with a new steel door, concrete pad, sloped approach and an aggregate walkway from a designated ADA parking space.

In accordance with the recommendation of the project architect, the building's north wall was reinforced and the rotted timber sill was replaced. To complete the project, electricity was restored to the building, a security system was installed, and the church's original front doors were repaired and refinished with the addition of new reproduction period door latches.

While working on the exterior restoration project, workers discovered two severely rotted timber sections along the top of the church's framework. After inspecting the deterioration, the structural engineer declared the building unstable. Securing an emergency loan from Preservation PA, Inc., the Oil Region Alliance initiated rapid response repairs. Gustafson General Contracting sistered custom-made wooden bracing to the problem timbers, installed interior support poles, and added cement pads beneath each upright timber on the church's perimeter, stabilizing the structure.

The Oil Region Alliance today operates the Neiltown Church as a special events venue. Memorial services, educational programs, and cultural events may be held at the building. Call the Oil Region Alliance for rental rates and information. The church is also open for tours by appointment by contacting the Oil Region Alliance.
